

Mental health

In order for us to feel good, having a healthy mind is just as important as having a healthy body and a healthy environment. It helps us to manage our day, take responsibility, be brave, achieve goals, experience joy and be happy.

Talking helps!

Conversations with people who feel the same as us or who are affected can help us lift the weight off our shoulders. For this reason there are information centres and groups where people who are feeling the same way can meet.

Injuries to your mind

Some people have experience bad things in their lives. This is often the case for people who have had to flee their home. The more bad things a person has experienced, the higher the risk their mental health is going to suffer.

Are you familiar with:

- Not being able to sleep well, or still being tired despite sleeping?
- Only being able to accomplish your daily tasks with great difficulty?
- Having constant unpleasant palpitations or pains?
- Always feeling sad, or having trouble feeling anything at all?
- Feeling as though you are carrying a giant weight on your shoulders and having feelings of guilt?
- Or being constantly angry and aggressive?

These could all be signs of damage to your mental health. Unfortunately, these wounds to your mind cannot be completely healed on their own. An injured mind doesn't heal like an injured leg.

What doesn't help

Some people use addictive substances in order to numb the signs of mental damage, to forget what they've experienced, or to make themselves physically and mentally strong. These can be legal drugs, such as alcohol or cigarettes, or illegal drugs, such as cannabis and heroin, as well as betting and gambling.

Drugs only help for a short while, most of the time it gets worse afterwards. This is because the causes of the bad feelings and the memories still remain. Also, the drugs alone can cause addiction, which means it is hard to live without them. They can give you more things to worry about, such as sickness and debt. Even medicine such as sleeping tablets, sedatives or pain killers can be addictive. They should not be taken without prior medical consent and for a long period of time.

Take care of yourself!

Simple things can help you in your everyday routine to calm your mind and relax your body, for example:

- Take a real break at least once a day, even from your smartphone.
- Go for a walk and move about in the fresh air.
- Doing exercise is relaxing – maybe there is a certain sport you want to try?
- Spend time with friends and people you know.
- Do the things you enjoy in your spare time.
- If possible, air your room out and drink some tea or coffee before going to bed.

When the mind is very badly injured, often these things alone are not enough to heal a person. Sometimes, people need support from other people outside their family who are quite good at caring for injured minds.
